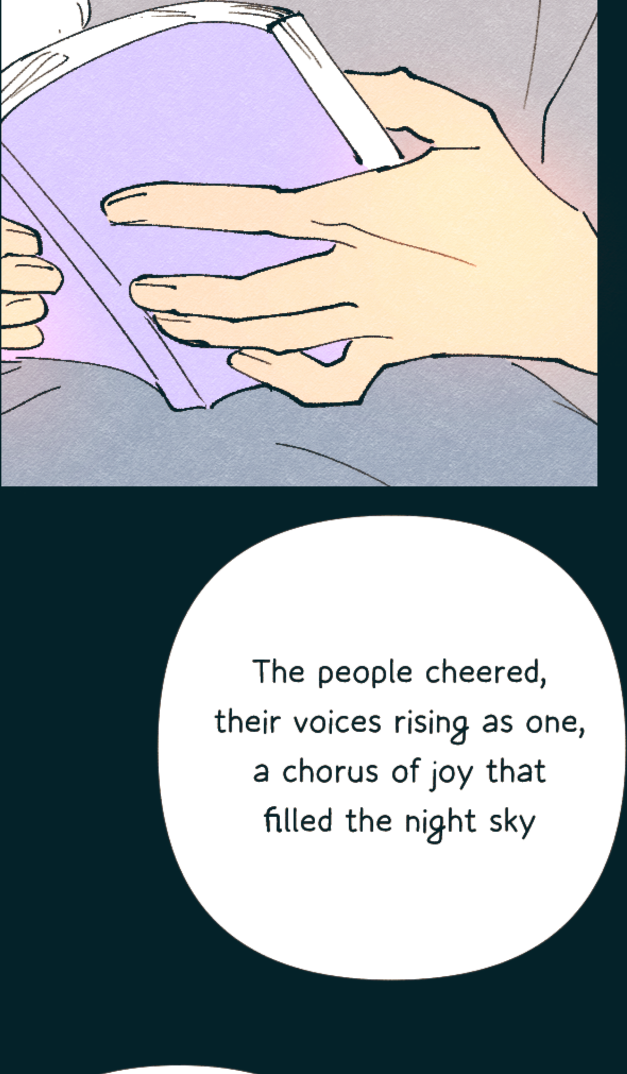
.. And as the Evil King fell, his magic disspates, and he finally drew his last breath.



The people cheered,
their voices rising as one,
a chorus of joy that filled the night sky

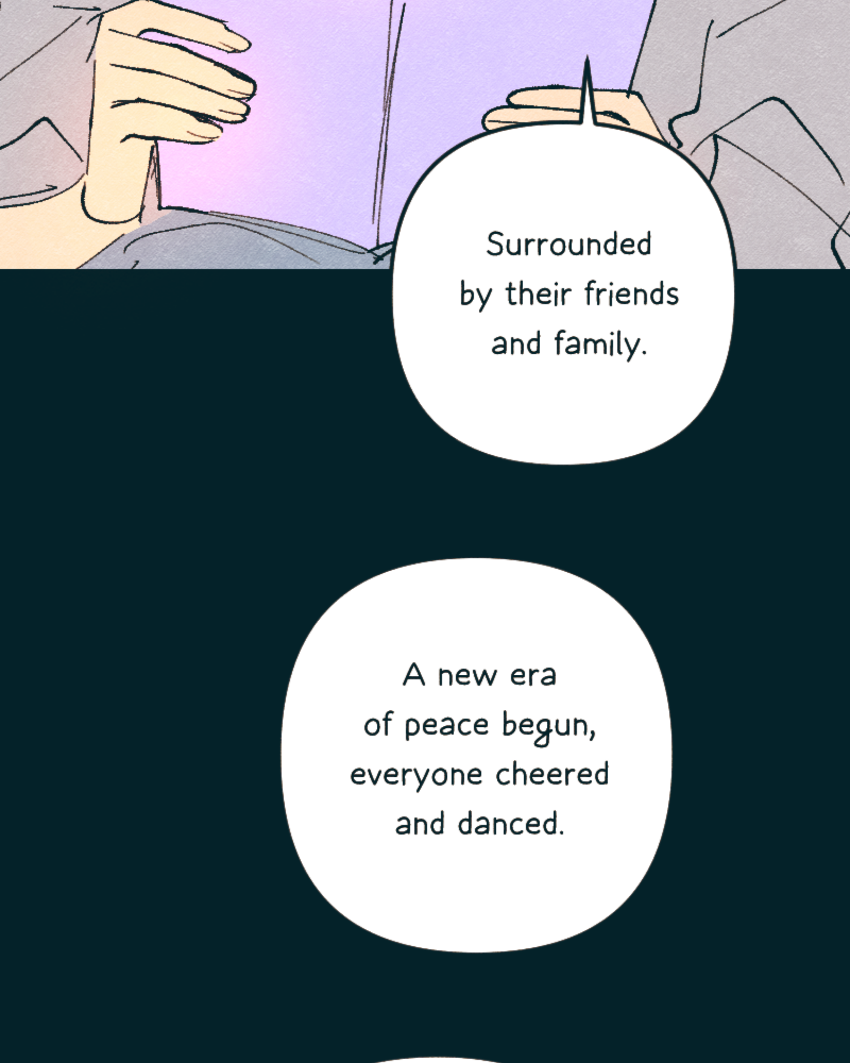
The Princess and the Warrior held a huge wedding ceremony,



Surrounded by their friends and family.
A new era of peace begun, everyone cheered and danced.

And they lived happily Ever after~ Close

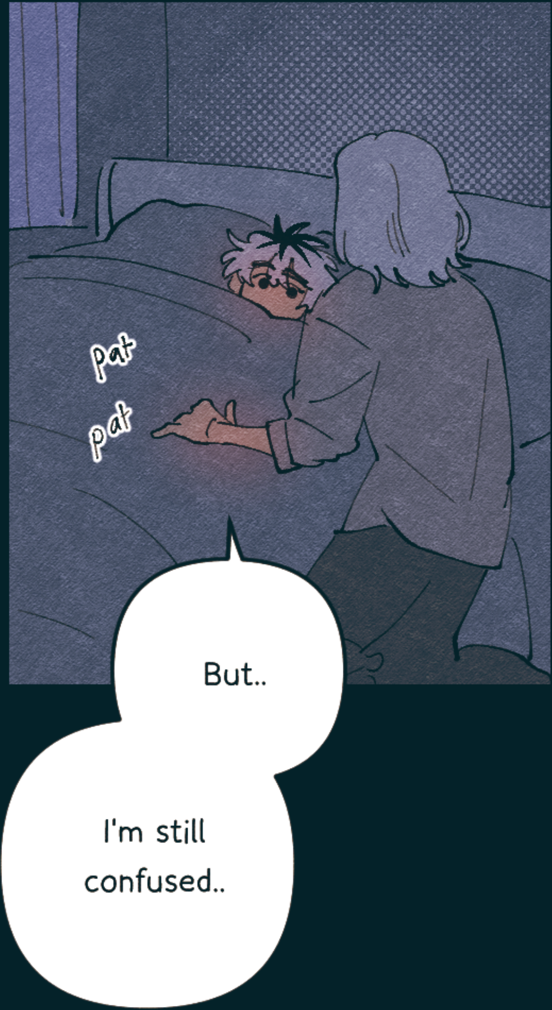
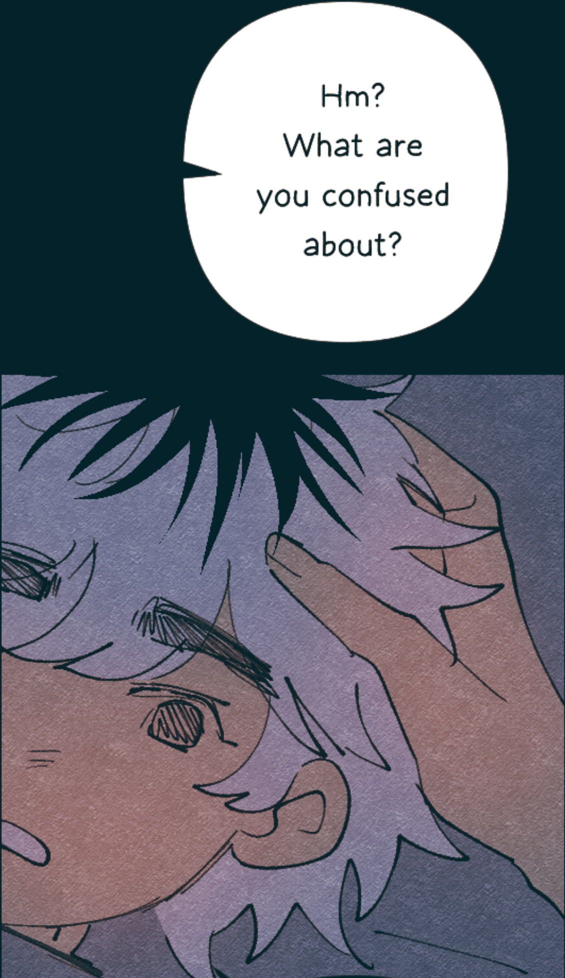
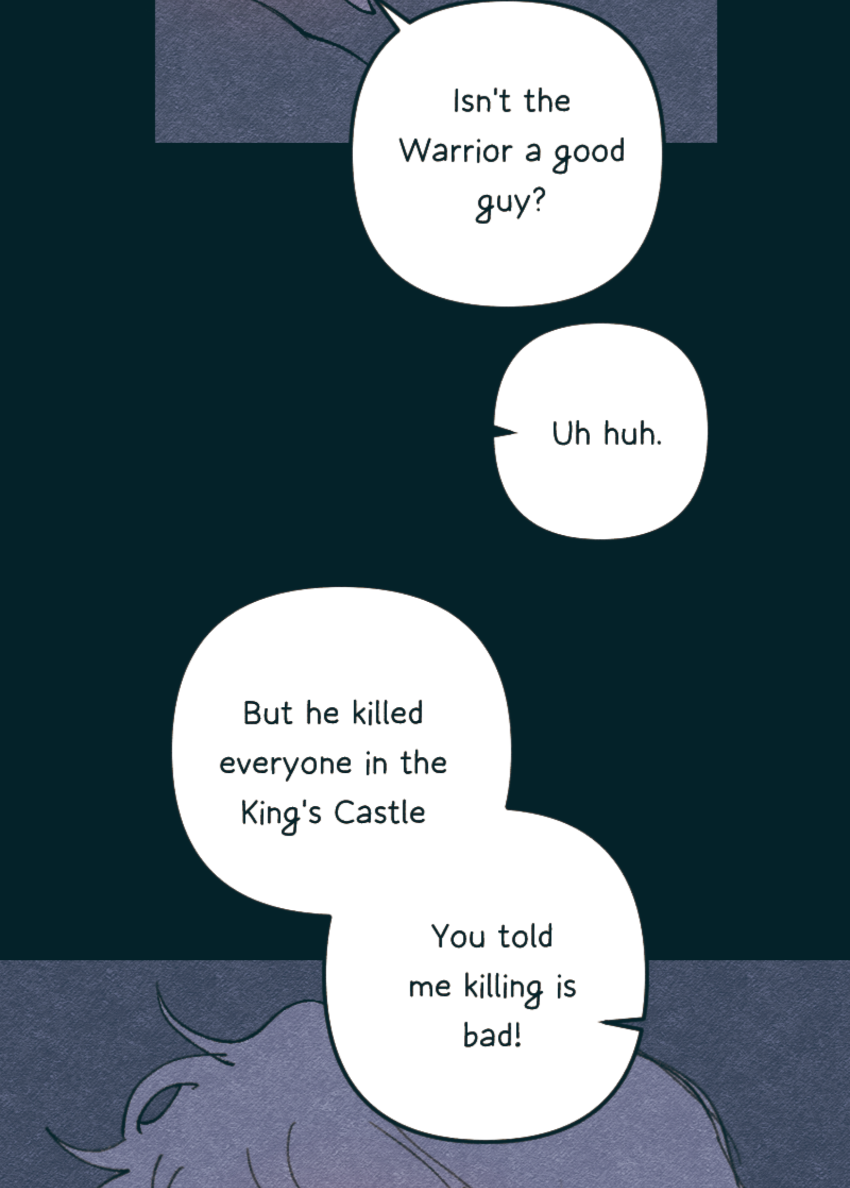
Alright,
it's bed time.



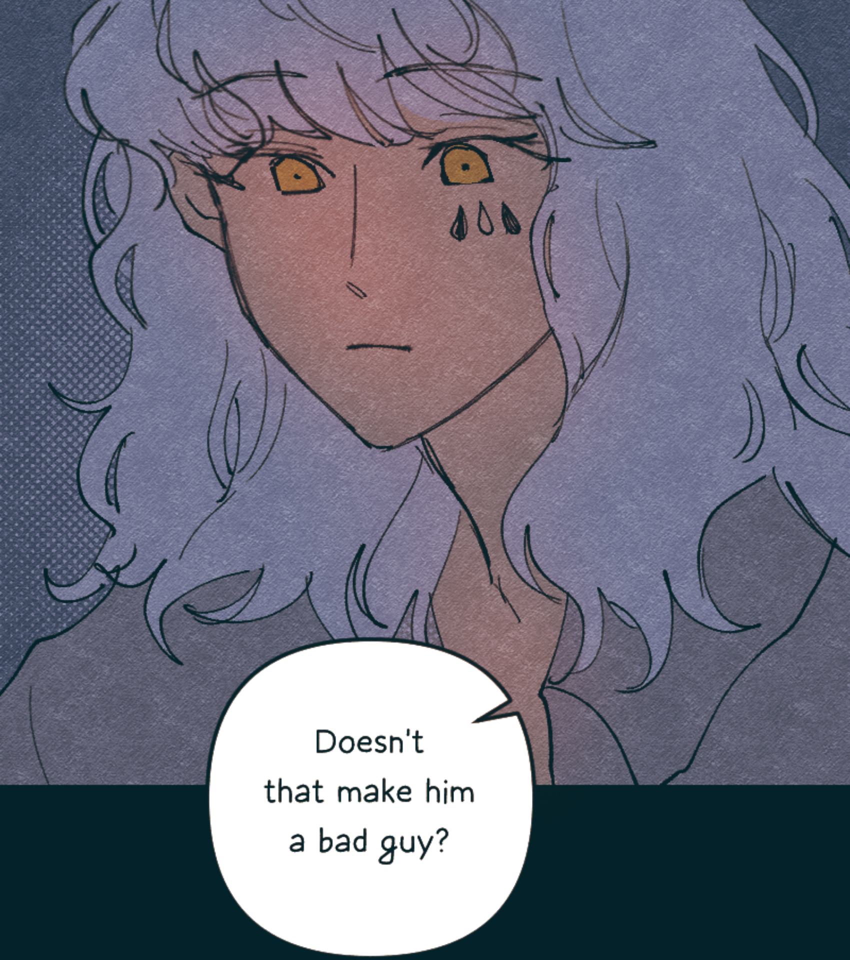
pat
pat
But..
I'm still confused..



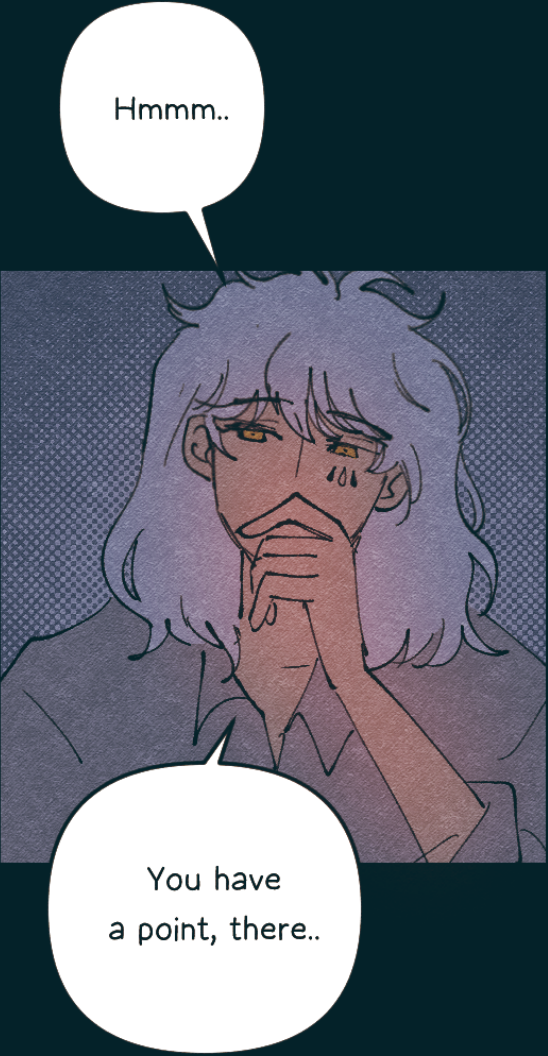
Hm? What are you confused about?



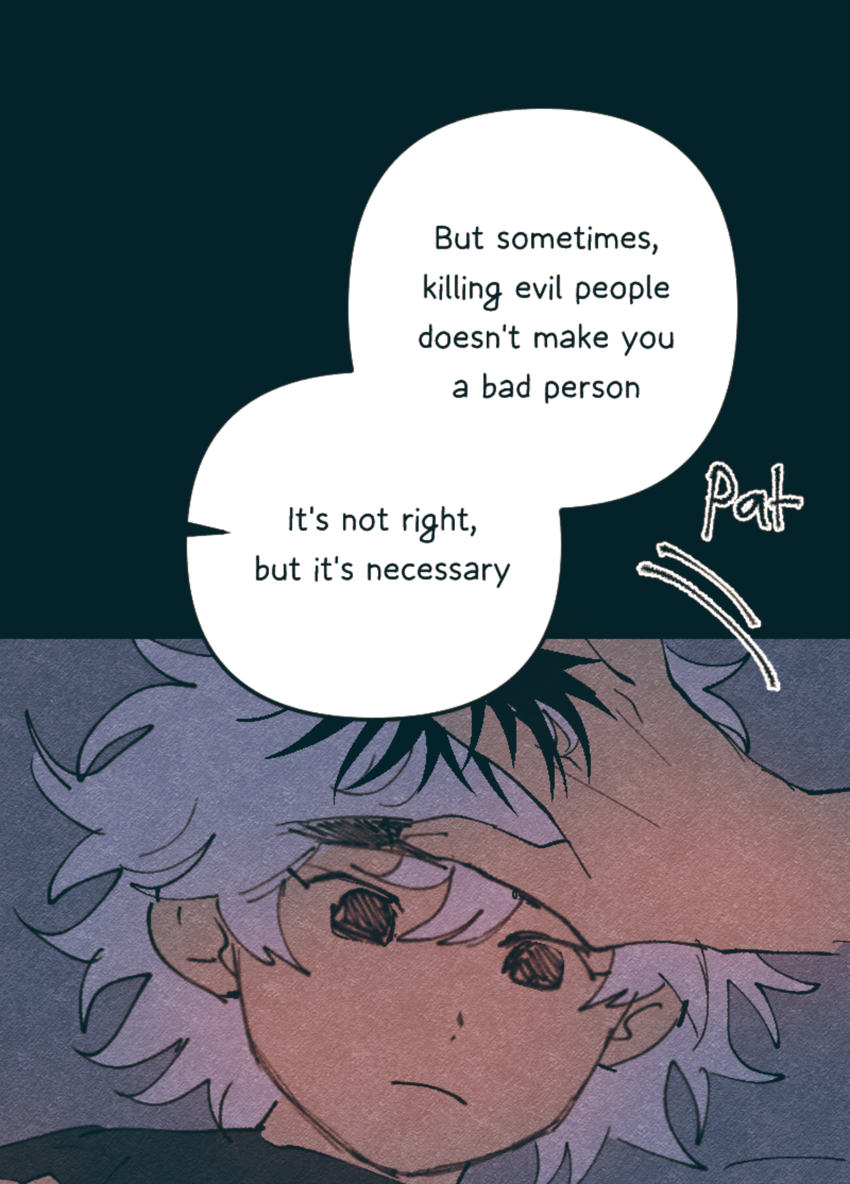
Isn't the Warrior a good guy?
Uh huh.
But he killed everyone in the King's Castle
You told me killing is bad!



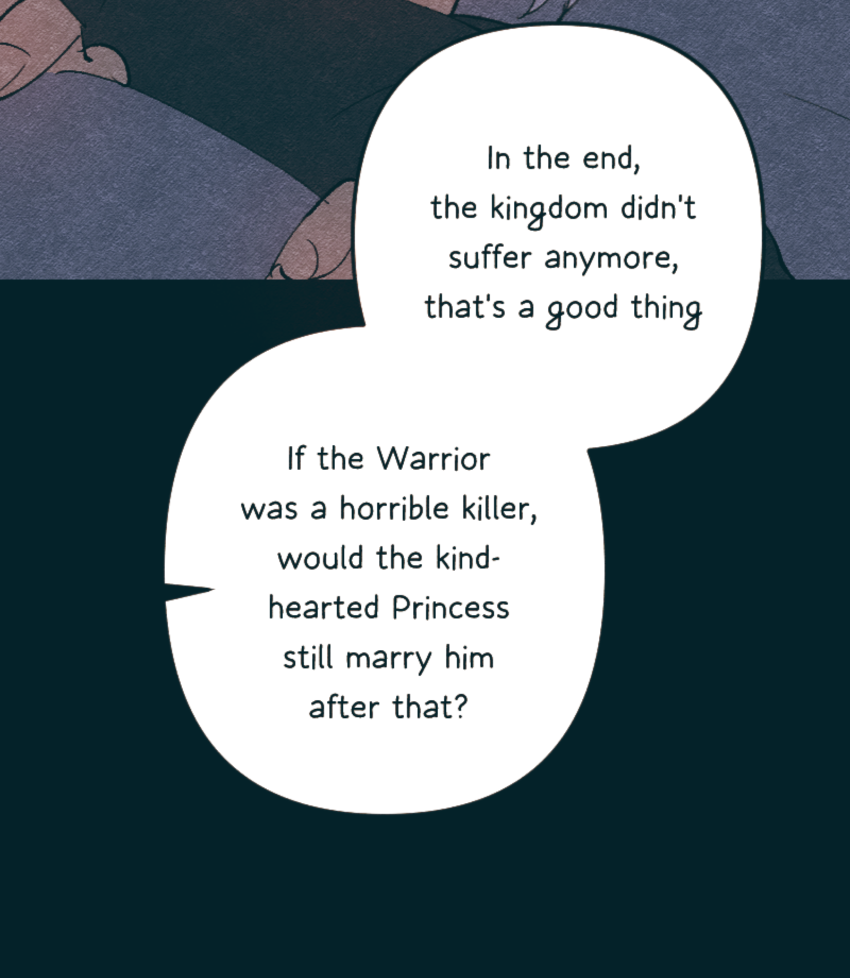
Doesn't that make him a bad guy?



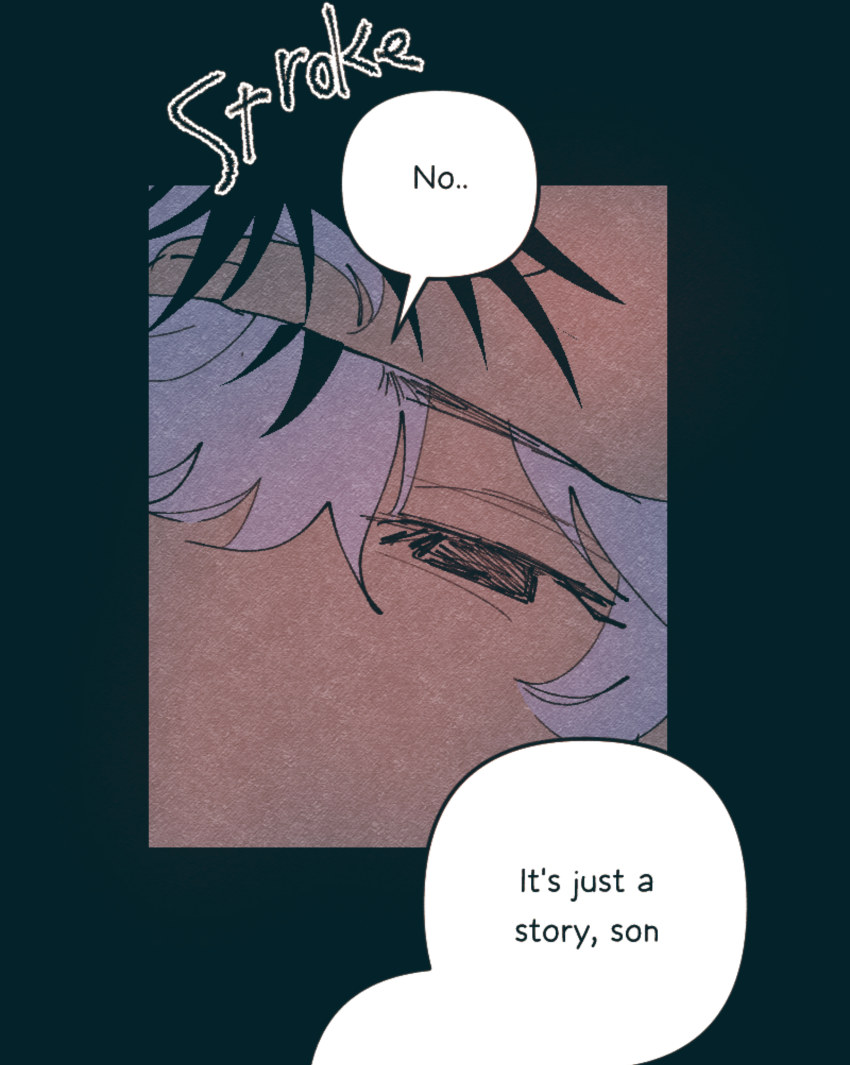
Hmmm..
You have a point, there..



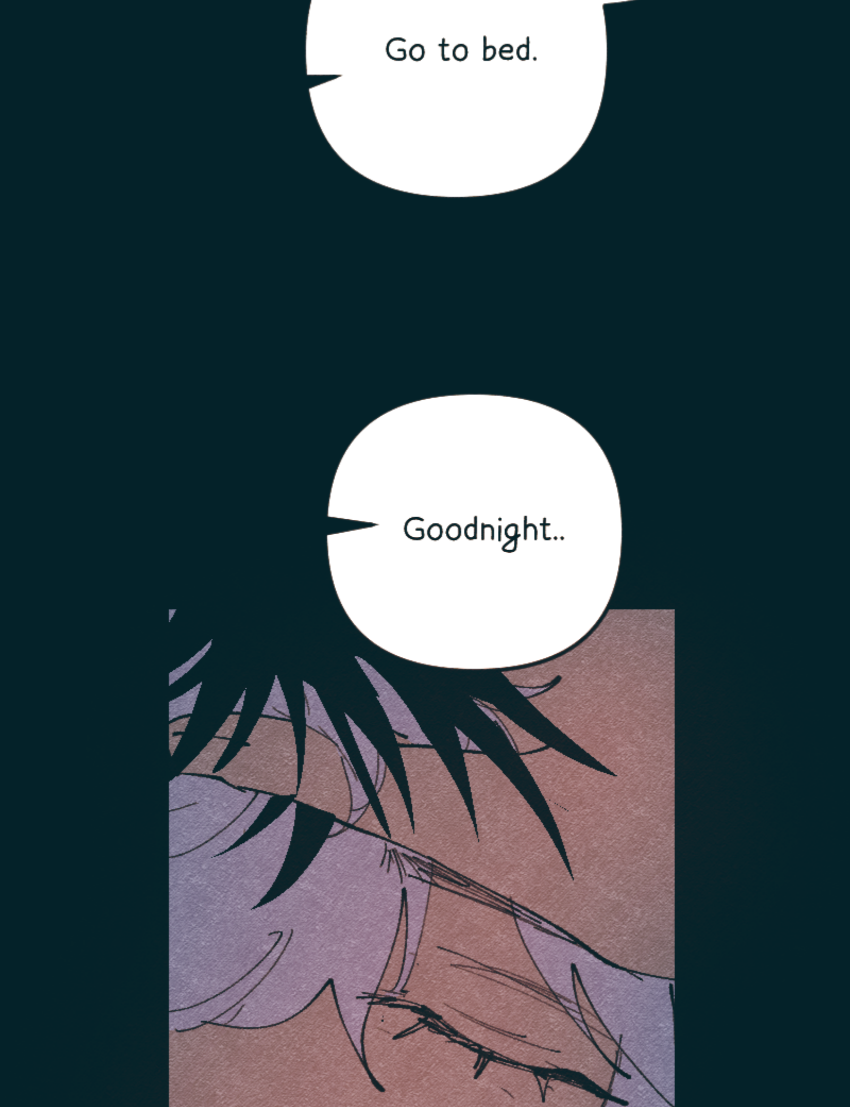
But sometimes, killing evil people doesn't make you a bad person
It's not right, but it's necessary
Pat



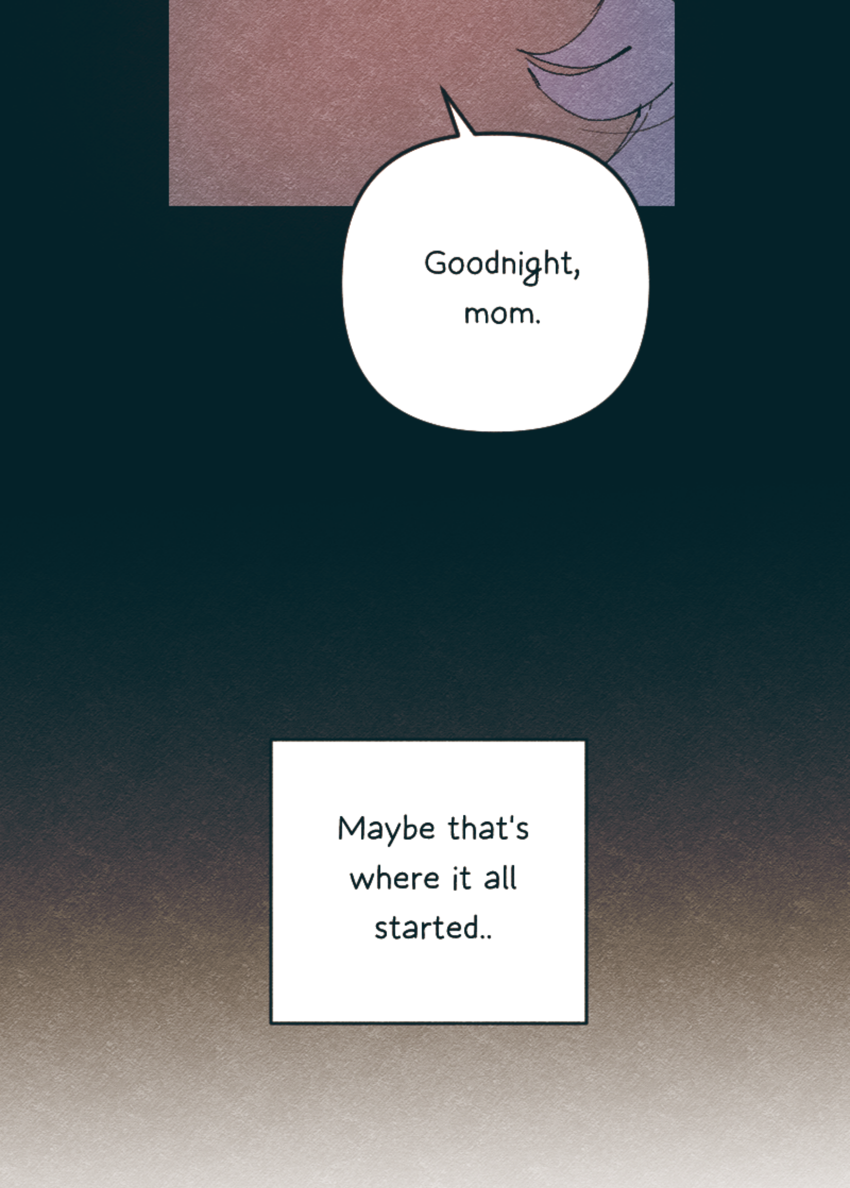
In the end, the kingdom didn't suffer anymore, that's a good thing
If the Warrior was a horrible killer, would the kind-hearted Princess still marry him after that?



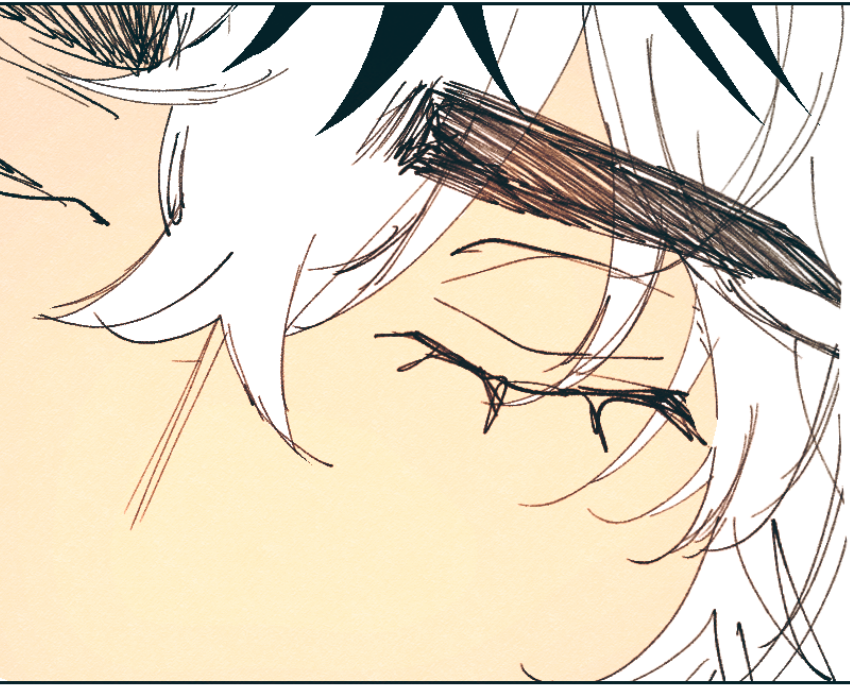
Stroke
No..
It's just a story, son



Go to bed.
Goodnight..



Goodnight, mom.
Maybe that's where it all started..



Is it okay
to tie my worth to being loved?

To being chosen?

If someone incredible

Someone I see as the epitome
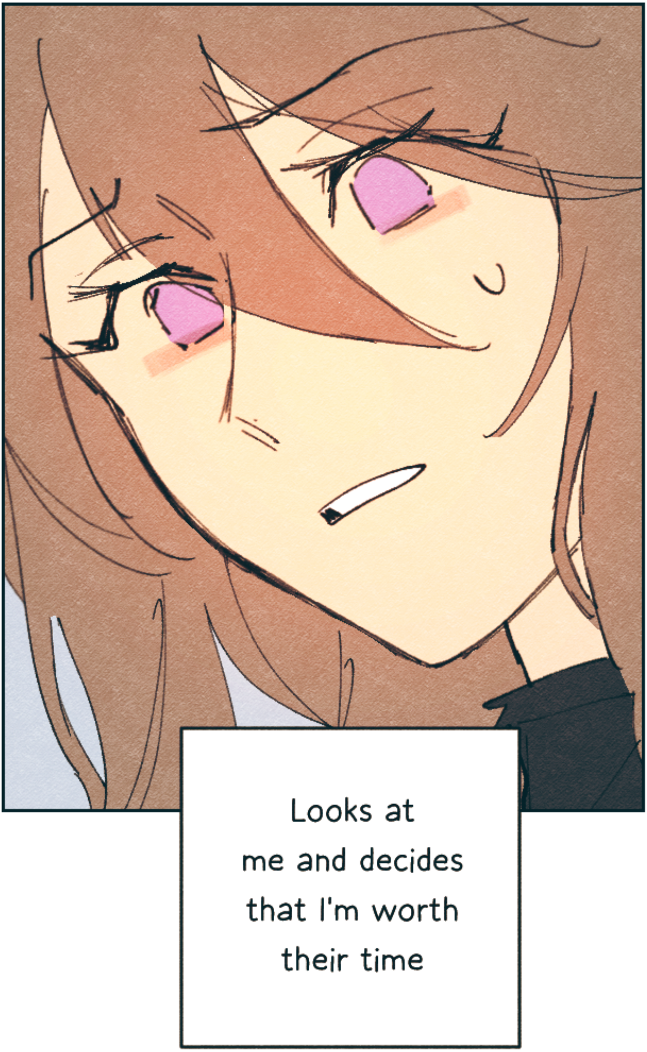
of goodness



Looks at me and decides that I'm worth their time their affection

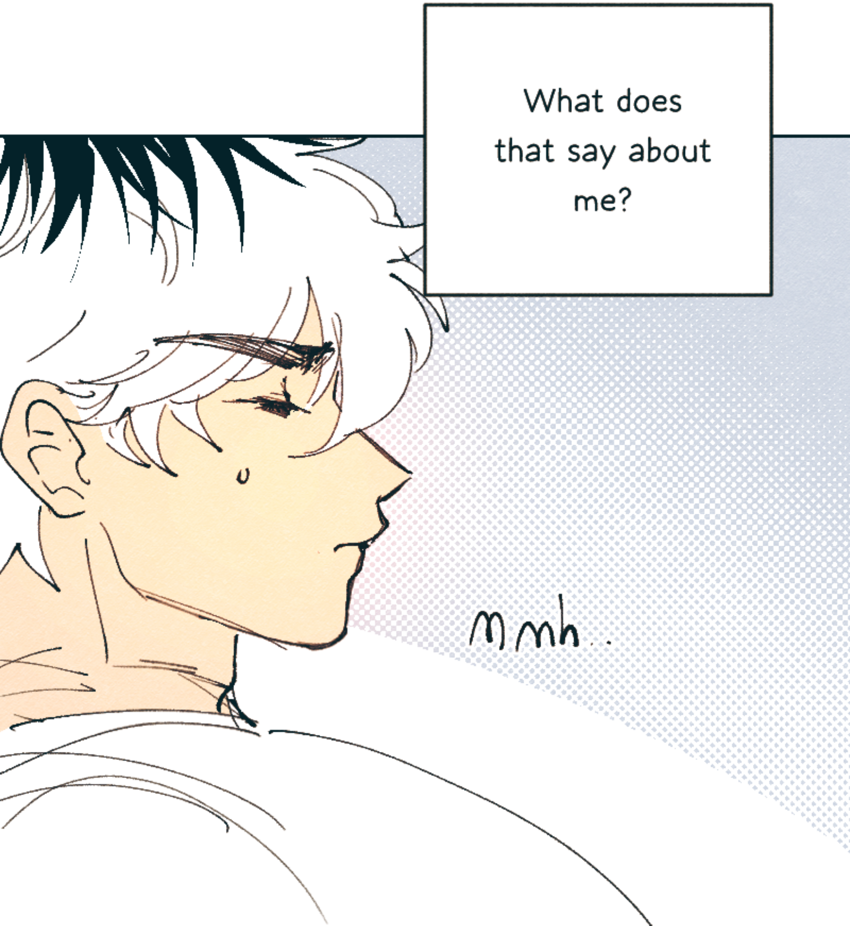
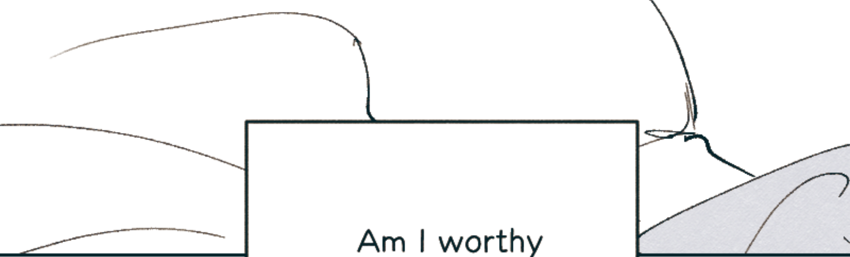
their heart



What does that say about me?
mmh..



Am I worthy
just because they say so?

If the Princess chooses to adore
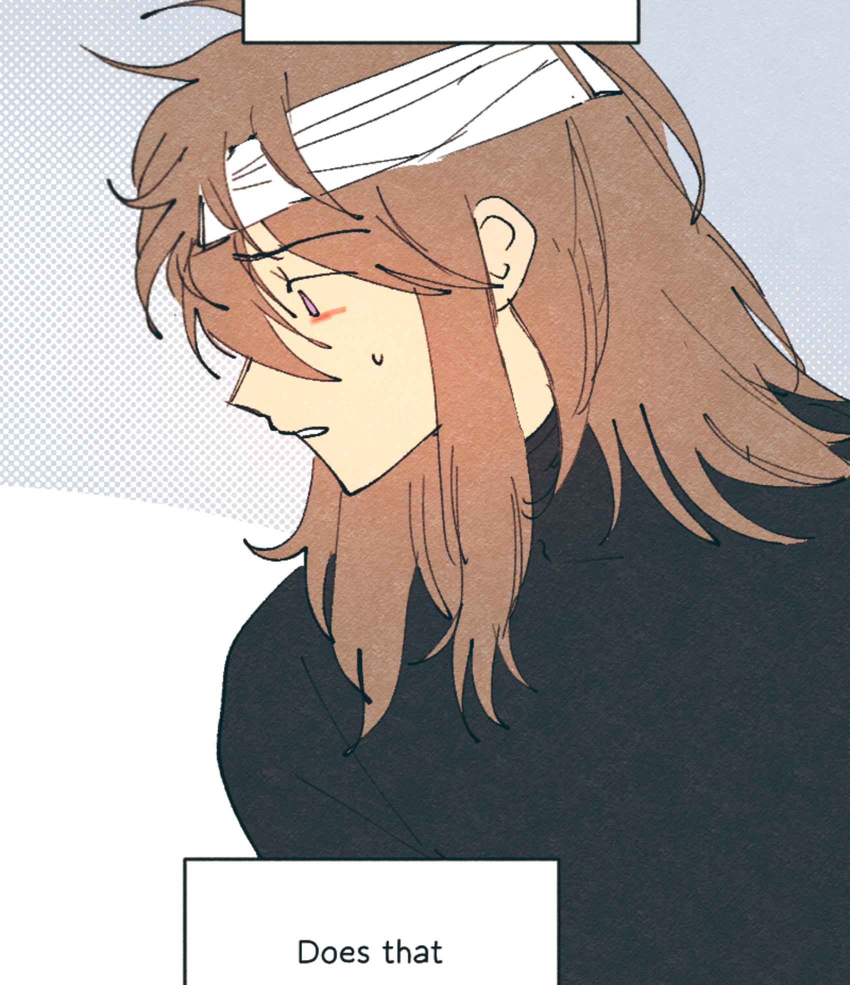
a killer



really make him
a good person?

No matter what he did to get there?

Like the Warrior who got the Princess in the end

Can I, too

be good?