Amicus has a strong professional interest in educating and inspiring the public about the rule of law and principles of justice, fairness, and integrity in our legal system.

Opening Arguments Media, LLC (“Opening Arguments”) is a Maryland limited liability company wholly owned by P. Andrew Torrez, an attorney who has practiced in this district with distinction for over 20 years.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Torrez is a 1997 graduate of Harvard Law School cum laude, a member of the Board of Governors of the Maryland Chapter of the Federal Bar Association, a Fellow of the American Bar Foundation, and has received numerous other honors. Opening Arguments Media, LLC produces the award-winning “Opening Arguments” podcast, which has had over eleven million listeners since launching in August of 2016.

The Opening Arguments podcast explains popular legal stories in the news with a particular focus on corruption in politics and law. It is co-hosted by Mr. Torrez and Thomas Smith, an inquisitive interviewer and non-attorney who asks questions and provides commentary on the news from a layperson’s perspective. One of the most popular segments on Opening Arguments is “Thomas Takes the Bar Exam,” in which Mr. Smith attempts to answer bar exam questions by applying common sense despite not having attended law school; the point of the segment – and the show in general – is to de-mystify and encourage a love of the law.

This “love of the law” is what has motivated Opening Arguments to file the instant brief. The Opening Arguments podcast is aimed at the general public, with a diverse audience of listeners that includes many law students and prospective law students.<sup>2</sup> Over the past four years, Opening Arguments has received dozens of emails from listeners who have said that the podcast inspired them to attend law school. Opening Arguments believes that its unwavering faith in the rule of law has been critical to inspiring others to join the legal profession.

Although Opening Arguments encourages listeners to trust in the justice system, that system only inspires trust when the underlying principles of justice, fairness, and integrity are maintained. Accordingly, amicus brings a unique perspective as well as rigorous legal research to the question pending before this Court. In particular, amicus suggests the government’s “Legal Background” section of the Motion (pp. 10-11) is misleading at best, and does not prevent this Court from denying relief or deferring judgment under Rule 48(a) until the Court is convinced that no unfair collusion has taken place here. Because the Defendant (obviously) has not objected to the government’s legal sleight-of-hand, amicus believes that its brief is useful in ensuring that Defendant and his allies at the Department of Justice do not twist the law to serve their own interests and schemes. Therefore, to preserve trust in the justice system and its principles of justice, fairness, and integrity, amicus respectfully submits this brief.

Pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 29(a)(4) and L.Cv.R. 7(o)(5), counsel for amicus state that no party’s counsel authored this brief in whole or in part; no party or party’s counsel contributed money that was intended to fund preparing or submitting the brief; and no person contributed money that was intended to fund preparing or submitting this brief.<sup>3</sup>

INTRODUCTION AND FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Amicus submits this brief out of a concern that the bedrock principles of justice, fairness, and integrity are in danger of being compromised with the filing of the government’s Motion to Dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Crim P. 48(a) [Doc. 198] (the “Motion”) and the accompanying consent by the Defendant, Lt. Gen. Michael T. Flynn.<sup>4</sup>

Mr. Flynn is a highly politically-connected Defendant, “a high-ranking government official who committed a crime while on the premises of and in the West Wing of the White House.”<sup>5</sup> Indeed, this Court frankly admonished Mr. Flynn that the “aggravating circumstances”<sup>6</sup> surrounding his criminal activities were “serious,”<sup>7</sup> explaining:

Not only did you lie to the FBI, but you lied to senior officials in the Trump Transition Team and Administration. Those lies caused the then-Vice President-Elect, incoming Chief of Staff, and then-Press Secretary to lie to the American people. Moreover, you lied to the FBI about three different topics, and you made those false statements while you were serving as the National Security Advisor, the President[-elect] of the United States' most senior national security aid[e]. I can't minimize that.

Two months later you again made false statements in multiple documents filed pursuant to the Foreign Agents Registration Act. So, all along you were an unregistered agent of a foreign country, while serving as the National Security Advisor to the President[-elect] of the United States.<sup>8</sup>

See id. at 39:20-40:1.

Despite Mr. Flynn’s having arguably “sold out” his country,<sup>9</sup> the government offered Mr. Flynn a proverbial “sweetheart” deal from the outset, charging him solely with a single count of making a false statement under 18 U.S.C. § 1001, and recommending a low-end Guidelines sentence of zero to six months of incarceration even before Mr. Flynn’s cooperation obligations to the government were completed.<sup>10</sup> As this Court noted, this sweetheart deal saved Mr. Flynn from potentially “grave” exposure to additional charges that could have resulted in spending more than a decade in prison.<sup>11</sup>

One of the only conditions of this deal was that Mr. Flynn cooperate fully, truthfully, and forthrightly and assist the government in its ongoing investigations.<sup>12</sup> By 2019, however, Mr. Flynn had largely ceased doing so; indeed, when questioned by this Court under oath, the most the line prosecutor would concede at that time was that “it remains a possibility” that Mr. Flynn might cooperate with the government’s investigations in the future.<sup>13</sup>

Nevertheless, to give Mr. Flynn the maximum potential benefit of the doubt – and to permit him to render the most fulsome and complete assistance to the government as possible – this Court continued to defer Mr. Flynn’s sentencing.<sup>14</sup> Thus, instead of potentially sending Mr. Flynn to prison nearly a year ago, this Court instead allowed him to retain his freedom, trusting that he would use that time to serve his country by helping to right the wrongs he had committed.

Sadly, Mr. Flynn abused this Court’s and the public’s trust. In January of this year, the government reported – with considerable understatement – that Mr. Flynn had “not substantially assisted” it in any matter.<sup>15</sup> Instead, Mr. Flynn acquired new counsel,<sup>16</sup> immediately changed his story, both publicly and in this court,<sup>17</sup> began denying responsibility for his actions, and ultimately moved to withdraw his voluntarily-entered guilty plea.<sup>18</sup> In doing so, Mr. Flynn began publicly to express an entirely new version of events that contradicted both his earlier, sworn grand jury testimony as well as statements he had made to the FBI on multiple occasions.<sup>19</sup> In addition, Mr. Flynn’s newly-articulated views undermined the testimony of other witnesses the government intended to call in its prosecution of Bijan Rafiekian<sup>20</sup> – the case in which the government had previously anticipated that Mr. Flynn would render the most assistance.<sup>21</sup>

Needless to say, Mr. Flynn’s brand new story and inconsistent statements rendered him useless as a witness for the prosecution,<sup>22</sup> depriving the government of what it anticipated would be “the best and most direct evidence” of the most crucial contested issue at trial over the “most serious charge” against Mr. Rafiekian.<sup>23</sup> Worse, not only was the government unable to call Mr. Flynn as a witness for the prosecution,<sup>24</sup> but Mr. Flynn actually intervened on behalf of the defendant<sup>25</sup> – an action the government described not only as “remarkable”<sup>26</sup> but “wholly inconsistent with the defendant assisting (let alone substantially assisting) or cooperating with the government in that case.”<sup>27</sup>

In any other case, one would expect that the government would not look particularly kindly upon a defendant who not only failed to render the kind of cooperation required by his plea deal, but actively undermined another criminal prosecution. Incredibly, that has not happened here. Instead, as this Court is well aware, the government has subsequently moved to drop all charges against Mr. Flynn with prejudice,<sup>28</sup> despite the fact that Mr. Flynn voluntarily pled guilty on December 1, 2017<sup>29</sup> and repeatedly reaffirmed that plea under oath before this Court.<sup>30</sup> In what this Court has described as an “unusual”<sup>31</sup> turn of events, the government’s motion was not signed by any of the line prosecutors in this case,<sup>32</sup> and on the same day that motion was filed, the lead prosecutor, Special Assistant U.S. Attorney Brandon L. Van Grack, withdrew from this case.<sup>33</sup>

Amicus’s argument is that this Court retains the discretion under Rule 48(a) to infer that a politically-connected defendant may be colluding with high-ranking officials in the Department of Justice to evade the consequences of his having broken the law and is therefore not required to dismiss this case. Instead, this Court can either deny the government’s Rule 48(a) motion or hold it sub curia pending additional evidentiary hearings.

ARGUMENT

I. Rule 48(a) Does Not Require This Court to Dismiss the Case Against Mr. Flynn.

This is a case of first impression. For the first time in our nation’s history, the government has moved to dismiss all charges with prejudice against a defendant who has already pled guilty.<sup>34</sup> The government’s Motion cites exactly zero cases in which a court has ever done what it is now asking this Court to do; and amicus – after exhaustive research – similarly knows of no cases in any jurisdiction, at any level, from any court, at any time that have ever granted such relief.

A. As a Threshold Matter, The Government Has Not Established That This District Recognizes a Rule 48(a) Motion to Dismiss After a Defendant Has Pled Guilty.

Rule 48(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure contains two short, straightforward sentences. The first permits a prosecutor to dismiss “an indictment, information, or complaint” with leave of court. Fed. R. Crim. P. 48(a). The second – restricting the first – requires that when such request for dismissal comes “during trial,” the defendant must also consent. Id. Rule 48(a) was enacted three-quarters of a century ago as a check on prosecutorial discretion; it replaced the prior rule which had no constraints on the entry of a nolle prosequi in the federal courts with one that “will permit the filing of a nolle prosequi only by leave of court.”<sup>35</sup>

Here, of course, the government does not seek to file a nolle prosequi, because Mr. Flynn has already pled guilty. Nor does the government seek to dismiss “an indictment, information, or complaint” – rather, in its own words, it seeks to overturn the conviction of Mr. Flynn. Motion at

<sup>35</sup> See id., Notes of Advisory Committee on Rules (1944) (emphasis added); see also U.S. v. Ammidown, 497 F.2d 615, 619-20 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (discussing history and applicability of Rule 48(a)).

10. Under a straightforward reading of the plain language of the text, Rule 48(a) simply does not permit such a filing, and no case in this Circuit has construed Rule 48(a) as doing so.

To overcome the plain language of Rule 48(a), the government must show that Rule 48(a)'s use of the word "complaint" should be judicially construed as also implicitly including the word "conviction" – and, in particular, a conviction arising due to a defendant's voluntary plea of guilty that was accepted by the court nearly two years ago where all that remains is for the Court to sentence the defendant. To advance this rather challenging argument, the government curiously cites to a Ninth Circuit decision, United States v. Hector, 577 F.3d 1099 (9th Cir. 2009) for the proposition that "[i]t is also 'well established that the Government may move to dismiss even after a complaint has turned into a conviction because of a guilty plea,'" Motion at 10. Hector, as shown immediately infra at Part I.B., is of no help to the government on the merits, as it requires a court evaluating whether to dismiss a conviction under Rule 48(a) to conduct precisely the kind of independent judicial analysis that the government eschews (and amicus encourages). But as a threshold matter, from expressing a "well established" rule, it is not clear that Hector applies at all in this Circuit.

The government's argument that Hector applies here is ostensibly supported by two lines of authority: (a) a "collecting cases" parenthetical in its citation to Hector; and (b) a "see also" citation to the Supreme Court's 1977 per curiam opinion in Rinaldi v. United States.<sup>36</sup> Upon closer examination, neither of these lines of authority hold water. Rinaldi, as this Court is well aware, did not involve a guilty plea, and thus is of no help to the government.<sup>37</sup> That leaves only Hector

<sup>37</sup> Nor did Rinaldi involve dismissal of all charges against a guilty defendant; the petitioner in Rinaldi had been convicted and was serving a six-year prison sentence for participating in a robbery plot that violated both state and federal law, and was subsequently charged, tried, and – a Ninth Circuit decision – and the cases “collected” therein, which consist only of other Ninth Circuit cases (and Rinaldi). Hector, 577 F.3d at 1101.<sup>38</sup> In other words, the judicially-created rule permitting Rule 48(a) motions to be filed in cases in which the defendant has already pled guilty appears to be limited to the Ninth Circuit.

There is good reason for this Court to suspect that this Circuit would not adopt the Ninth Circuit’s reasoning in Hector. In U.S. v. Ammidown, 497 F.2d 615 (D.C. Cir. 1973), the petitioner asked the D.C. Circuit to vacate his conviction and reinstate his previously-proffered guilty plea to a lesser offense – relief virtually identical<sup>39</sup> to that which the government seeks here. Ammidown, 497 F.2d at 618. Before ultimately granting the petitioner’s relief on other grounds, the Ammidown Court first considered whether Rule 48(a) applied. Because Rule 48(a) “requires the prosecutor to terminate a prosecution by dismissal of an indictment,” id. at 619 (emphasis added), the D.C. Circuit concluded that “Rule 48(a) does not apply as such to the case at bar,” id. at 619-20. Ammidown thus strongly suggests that the D.C. Circuit would not adopt the Ninth convicted in federal court for the same offense, id. at 23-24, despite the longstanding policy against multiple prosecutions set forth in Petite v. United States, 316 U.S. 529 (1960). Id. The government subsequently moved to dismiss the federal indictment against Rinaldi pursuant to Rule 48(a), id. at 29-30, to which the trial court refused to grant leave due to other allegations of prosecutorial misconduct. Id. at 30. Ultimately, the Supreme Court determined that dismissal of the federal charges was appropriate. Id. at 30-31. See discussion infra at Part I.B. (arguing that dismissal here is not in the public interest).

<sup>38</sup> United States v. Gonzalez, 58 F.3d 459 (9th Cir. 1995), United States v. Garcia-Valenzuela, 232, F.3d 1003 (9th Cir. 2000), and Vazquez-Ramirez v. United States Dis. Court, 443 F.3d 692 (9th Cir. 2006). See discussion infra at Part I.B.

<sup>39</sup> But less extreme. As in Rinaldi, the petitioner in Ammidown did not seek to escape all punishment, but merely to substitute a greater sentence for a lesser one. See Ammidown, 497 F.2d at 618 (seeking to reinstate plea to second degree murder), at 624 (granting same). See discussion infra at Part I.B. (arguing that dismissal here is not in the public interest).

Circuit's reasoning in Hector and judicially expand the definition of the word "indictment" to include "conviction." If this Court agrees, it can simply deny the Motion.

B. If the Hector Rule Applies in This Circuit, it Requires This Court to Ascertain Whether Granting Such Relief is in the Public Interest and Not Merely Defer to Prosecutorial Discretion.

Assuming arguendo that this Circuit would adopt the Ninth Circuit's reading of Rule 48(a) (the "Hector Rule"), this Court nevertheless retains sufficient discretion to either deny the Motion or hold it sub curia pending additional fact-finding. Hector and the cases upon which it relies clearly require that any court determining whether to dismiss charges under Rule 48(a) must rely on its own independent judgment as to whether such a dismissal would be in the public interest and not merely defer to the prosecutor's discretion.

In Hector, for example, the defendant pled guilty to both receipt and possession of child pornography. Hector, 577 F.3d at 1100. Almost immediately afterwards, the Ninth Circuit ruled that due to the overlap in the elements of those two crimes, convicting a defendant on both receipt and possession of child pornography would violate the defendant's constitutional double jeopardy rights.<sup>40</sup> Id. In light of the new rule, the defendant moved to dismiss the receipt count (Count I), because Count I carried a higher base offense level and a statutory mandatory minimum sentence. Id. The trial court agreed that, consistent with the new rule handed down by the Ninth Circuit, it could only sentence Hector under one count, but left it to the prosecutor to determine which one to dismiss. Id. at 1100-01.<sup>41</sup> On appeal, the Ninth Circuit reversed, holding that the district court <sup>41</sup> ("After the prosecution argued for its preferred sentence, the court noted that the prosecutor had not moved to vacate either conviction. The prosecutor responded that she would do so after Hector was sentenced on Count I. 'Then I'll sentence him on Count II,' the court replied. 'But I have to sentence him, and I can only sentence him on one count. And if that's your choice, I'm going to sentence him under the count that I believe is appropriate.' The prosecution then moved to vacate the possession conviction, and the court granted that motion.").

had abused its discretion by deferring to the prosecutor and failing to exercise its own independent judgment, id. at 1103, and ordering the district court “to hold a hearing and then to make a discretionary determination as to which conviction should be vacated.” Id. at 1104.
